SECTION III: NARRATIVE

BILL SUMMARY

Synopsis: House Bill 406 would allow people who are victims of a crime while in jail or prison to apply for compensation under the Crime Victims Reparation Act after their release.

Previously, the law prohibited compensation for individuals who were confined at the time of the crime. The bill removes that restriction, allowing people who were victims of a crime while serving jail or prison sentences to seek financial aid upon release. Does not specify what sort of aid may be available for incarcerated crime victims and does not make an appropriation.

FISCAL IMPLICATIONS

The proposed change would help foster rehabilitation, justice and healing for victims, supporting their successful reintegration into society. The change would not have a fiscal impact on the Corrections Department.
