It is estimated this number will increase over 2022 and 2023 as inflation affected pricing and maximum SNAP benefits were removed as of the end of February 2023

*The only reason the food banks distributed above and beyond the missing meal gap in 2020 was because of the massive increase in USDA commodities and the Coronavirus Food Assistance Program (CFAP).

High Level Food Access Gaps Across the State

Indigenous Communities, all ages

Moderately to Highly Rural Communities, all ages

Families/households/individuals above 185% FPL, but not earning enough to make ends meet

Those with transportation challenges and issues

Homebound individuals

Weekends & Holidays

Low availability of fresh produce if not near grocery store or farmer's market

How Food Banks and the Food Bank Network are Addressing Gaps

Building relationships with indigenous communities to bring food to them, focusing on culturally appropriate foods, and fresh fruits and vegetables

Utilizing data to identify areas in New Mexico with highest need and lowest access, actively training and onboarding partners in those areas

Making food available at distributions for New Mexicans who are having trouble making ends meet

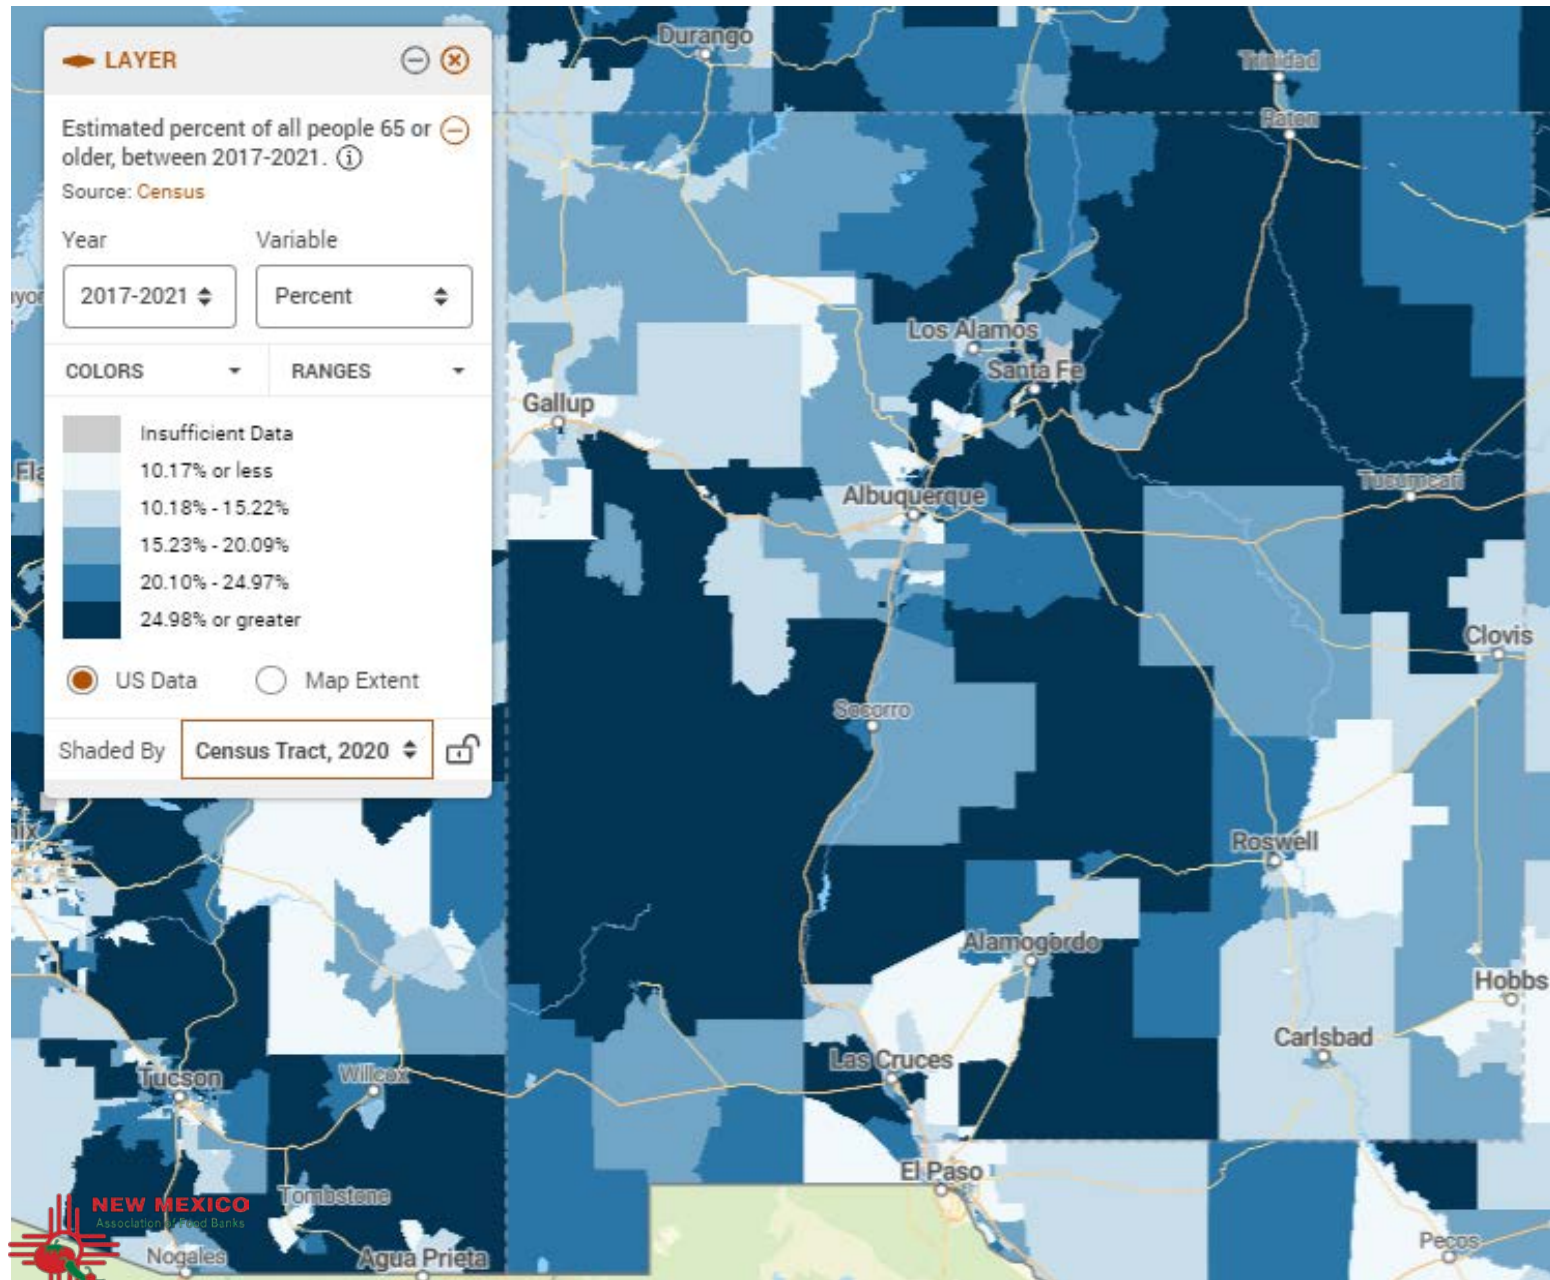

Bringing food to communities where there are no grocery stores so people do not have to travel long distances

Piloting home delivery options with DoorDash and Amazon as well as training partners on how to do home delivery in more rural settings

Working with partners across the state to have distributions available on weekends and holidays whenever possible

Brings fresh produce to communities that do not have a grocery store or farmer's market nearby

Rural Communities in New Mexico Have Growing Numbers of Seniors

- 18.5% of New Mexicans were ages 65 and up in 2020. New Mexico is ranked 13th among all 50 states for percentage of its population who are 65 and older.
- If current trends continue, the 65+ population will account for over 22% of New Mexico's Population in 2030.
- The 65+ population increased in each of New Mexico's 33 counties from 2010 to 2020. Catron County had the highest percentage of county population ages 65+.
- New Mexico also ranks among the worst in the nation for poverty among people age 65 and older (12.8% for 2021).

- New Mexico's total population increased by 2.8% from 2010 to 2020, but the population of people ages 65 and older increased by 43.7%
- Access to food will continue to be an issue, especially for seniors in our state as the number of seniors increases over the next 7 years

Current Programming for Seniors

- Food banks are partnering with ALTSD in providing pre-boxed food for seniors in several high-need low-access areas
- Food boxes do not provide fresh fruits and vegetables (any fruits and vegetables are canned)
- Senior-specific programs to provide fresh fruits and vegetables are tied to farmer's markets. Markets operate from June – November, leaving 6 months without fresh produce access
- Food banks provide fresh fruits and vegetables year-round in all 33 counties

Groceries are so expensive and we can barely afford buying food. I have been taking care of my elderly parents, who recently moved in with me. It is so challenging to navigate our food bills while caring for my mother with dementia. We are thankful for all the fresh produce.

- Mary

My great-grandmother is homebound and recently had surgery. I've been taking care of her since her surgery and I read information about this distribution on Facebook, so I decided to attend and pick up food for her. I'm surprised by all the fruits and vegetables, I wasn't expecting this in our small community.

- Alex

I lost my husband in April and it has been really difficult making ends meet. I struggle with addiction, mental illness, and have diabetes, - this healthy food is essential to keeping me healthy. I no longer receive food stamps and my groceries, car, house are so expensive right now. Thank you, Roadrunner.

Importance of Recurring Funding

Why Recurring Funding is Needed for the Food Banks

- New Mexico has historically been in the top 5 hungriest states for seniors and children for many years
- Recurring funding is needed because increasing food access through grocery stores and other retailers will not happen tomorrow
- Basic food access infrastructure is needed in many parts of the state
- We have an opportunity to work together to address these needs

What the Food Banks Bring

- An existing network of more than 500 partners across the state that can mobilize and get food to people quickly
- Can use the standing contract that HSD has with food banks due to USDA commodities
- Recurring funding for food under the food initiative (Community Food Assistance Program) would allow the food banks to maintain food levels to the hungriest parts of our state

The Food Bank network is essential in our state for basic food access

Opportunities for Children

- Passing of Universal Healthy School Meals was a huge step forward last session – the food banks are in full support!
- Hungry or food insecure children come from hungry or food insecure homes
- Though school meals are important, they don't address the food needs of other family members of those children, including seniors
- School meals are not available over the weekend, during holidays, or over the summer
- We need to work together to ensure consistent, ongoing food access and availability to children AND their families

Opportunities for Seniors

- In rural areas of NM, overall age is increasing
- All of us desire to keep people in their homes and functioning as long as possible - age well and in place
- Seniors can't use their SNAP if there is no place to buy food
- As seniors age, transportation becomes more and more challenging
- Research has linked social isolation and loneliness for seniors to higher risks for a variety of physical and mental conditions including cognitive decline, depression, and heart disease
- Distributions provide more than food - they serve as an opportunity for seniors to come together and have that important social interaction they need

New Mexico Association of Food Banks (NMAFB) Request
